In the early nineteen eighties, I was lucky to have Emilio Coppola install the stonework in my own residence in Greenwich, Ct. His reputation was that he was the master of his craft and I found that to be absolutely accurate. When I started my own firm in 1991, I felt lucky to have him install all the stonework in projects I undertook, knowing it would be beautiful.

During that time he was training his son Robert to take over the masonry work someday and his son Joe to be responsible for the business side of his projects. They have carried on the Coppola tradition of being the finest in their field.

The stone walls they construct are in the best methods of old, when things were done by hand, with care and knowledge. This is equally true of random-patterned stone terraces, pathways, outdoor fireplaces and of the walls of houses. They are completely capable even of changing architectural drawings if they see that improvements can be made to the results.

Emilio Coppola is lucky to have had sons who can continue the high level of masonry that he was known for, rare in this day, and garden designers like myself are very fortunate to be able to count on their installation, knowing it will be up to the most demanding standards.

Please add me to the list of people who are giving testimony to the excellence of your work.

Thank you.
